How does the financial aid work if student changes their mind

There are different types of financial aid:

- 1. Free Application for Federal Student Aid or FAFSA—if a student has been awarded grants based on their financial need in FAFSA, that amount will remain and the application can be applied to any post-secondary school (think university, community college, cosmetology school, trade school, etc.) What is awarded may differ by school, but it can still be applied.
- 2. Scholarship awarded by the college-In some cases, a student can defer their admissions which will preserve their scholarship. Each college will have their rules surrounding this how to defer and how long it can be done. Community colleges would prefer that a student applies when they plan to attend, and not to apply and then defer.
- 3. Private scholarships that may be awarded to a student will follow a student to where they plan to attend, however, many of them may have parameters, such as must attend a 4 year university, etc. Each private scholarships will have their own rules so students would have to check with that entity to find out what happens if a scholarship is awarded, but the student changes their plans.

What is the process for transferring AP credits to community college?

Students would send their AP Scores from College Board to their community college and it will be reviewed for credit. Students would request this through their student AP account. They can login to their account here: https://apstudents.collegeboard.org/ If they
